Not illustrated. 1904 Excerpt: . . . have seen them at a suitable time of year. Of interesting people he had seen a great many, but not, I think, more than I, who am now a little older than he was when he was taken from us. My nephew Douglas writes from the Mena House Hotel close to the Pyramids: --I have been riding lately with Conan Doyle, the novelist, and find him excellent company. Talking of unconscious literary plagiarism, or rather of literary coincidence, he said that some years ago, while travelling in Switzerland, he came upon an inn which was isolated among the mountains during four months of the year. By the time he had descended to the plain below, the plot of a story, in which two enemies were to be shut up in this place during the four months, was clear in his mind. At the first railway bookstall he came to, one of Maupassants books caught his eye. He bought it, and turning to the first page LAuberge appeared as the heading of the story. The Auberge was his identical inn, the story was the story of two enemies shut up there during the winter, and the denouement the same as he had imagined.
