Not illustrated. 1899 Excerpt: . . . says of Mann, It was he who, through the idea of normal education, laid the foundations of the profession of teaching. Superintendent Greenwood writes The sweep of Manns mind embraced Gods universe, focussed on the child. He believed implicitly in the highest possibilities of human development. Everything for the child was his text. For the rest of this brief paragraph nothing will serve better than to quote a few thoughts as expressed by Mann himself: The education of the whole people, in a republican government, can never be attained without the consent of the whele people. Enlightenment, not coercion, is our resource. We can not drive our people up a dark avenue even though it be the right one; but we must hang the starry lights of knowledge about it, and show them not only the directness of its course to the good of prosperity and honor, but the beauty of the way that leads to it. . . . Educate your children. Educate them in the great eternal principles of justice and right which underlie the entire length of human existence. (To his pupils at Antioch, ) Another day, ay, another hour, and we separate. Would to God I could continue this journey with you through all its future course. There is no suffering of a physical nature which I could survive, that I would not gladly bear if thereby I could be set back to your starting point. When I think after one life...
