Excerpt: .with joy, not merely as a custom or form, but from feeling the actual need of it in their souls, the public services which are celebrated in their churches. Not satisfied with that, they delight for the most part in attending also private meetings for edification, which are held in almost all the churches where there is a truly faithful minister, and where there are truly converted souls. It is, however, to be regretted, that the habit of having evening services is not more common in France, and especially at Paris. The public celebration of the Sabbath is well begun there, but it is not concluded in so serious and impressive a manner as on the other side of the Channel. This, doubtless, results from the habits of our ancestors, who, persecuted at the origin of the Reformation, and even later, were compelled by prudence, and in order not to create suspicion, to avoid nightly meetings, and prefer assemblies by day. It results also from our family habits. In France, especially at Paris, dinner is at from six to seven o'clock in the evening; besides, the Sunday is the day in which the different members of a family generally like to unite and pass together the hours they would not so easily find disengaged during the week. Besides this, it must be admitted that our churches are hardly fit for evening services, and that it is generally very difficult to establish proper means...
